Background

Late in 2008 Donna & Gareth Mitchelson were heartbroken to be told that their wee boy – Logan (aged 4) - was suffering from Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy (DMD). DMD is a genetic progressive muscle wasting disease almost exclusively affecting young boys.

Presently there is no cure for DMD – however things are changing. New Genetic research is underway making for the first time the dream of a treatment a realistic possibility.

There are, however, a great many costs that are associated with the care and well-being of boys with this condition and it is for reason that Gareth performed the original 'fling for Logan' challenge.

We are touched that through the kindness and generosity of others the 'fling for Logan' challenge is continuing.
